

Dear Brother,

As the Christmas season is upon us, I find myself reflecting on how deeply its message aligns with the principles we hold dear in Masonry. Beyond the lights, gifts, and celebrations, this time of year gently reminds us of our higher duties—to one another, to humanity, and to the Great Architect of the Universe.

Christmas calls us back to charity and service, urging us to look beyond ourselves and extend the cement of brotherly love to those who are struggling or in need. Like the Wise Men who offered their gifts with humility and purpose, we too are reminded that our greatest offerings are not material, but acts of kindness, compassion, and selfless service.

It is also a season of hope and light. In a world that can often feel shadowed by division or hardship, Christmas encourages us to carry light within ourselves—to be sources of understanding, patience, and unity. Just as the Star guided the Magi on their journey, may the inner light we strive to cultivate guide our steps and our actions.

The story of the Magi has always resonated with me as a reflection of the Masonic journey itself: a lifelong pursuit of truth, knowledge, and spiritual growth. Their search reminds us that improvement is never complete, and that our labor continues long after the season has passed.

Above all, Christmas offers us a moment to pause—to take stock of our blessings, to express gratitude, and to renew our commitment to live by the universal virtues of love, forgiveness, and compassion. Though we may part for the holidays, the bonds we share remain strong, with the promise that we will meet again, strengthened by purpose and fellowship.

May this Christmas bring you peace, light, and renewed strength, and may the lessons of the season remain with us throughout the coming year.

Fraternally and sincerely,

Mark Wilson - Past Master
